

STREAM

The distinguishing feature of the extendable Stream table is undoubtedly the unusual shape of its legs. Created by means of a subtraction and sanding process, it does away with the usual need for angular, triangular, square or rectangular sections which are found on almost all these kinds of tables.

The long distance between the inner corners not only clearly indicates how much seating ease and leg room there is, but also gives it a light and dynamic silhouette. It has an uncomplicated yet instantly recognisable design. The slender long legs hold up a versatile extendable top available in several different materials and finishes.
